National security agencies:

Right wing to the rescue

"It is about time that someone stood up and stopped those press barons and liberals from dismantling the CIA and the FBI."

That in essence is the message from right-wing forces who have banded together to form a new organization to expand the "security and intelligence" capabilities of the FBI and CIA. The new group is called the Security and Intelligence Fund.

Liberation News Service reports that the right-wing group is equipped with a quarterly journal called "Situation Report," which is designed to keep members informed about "developments affecting America's intelligence community."

Responsibility for the current criticism against the spy agencies, in the view of the Security and Intelligence Fund, rests with the "leftists in Congress."

"The leftists in Congress," the group contends, "are seeking passage of the huge omnibus bill—the National Intelligence Reorganization and Reform Act of 1978—which, if enacted in its present form, would complete the 'dismantling' of effective security and intelligence."
